Editorial

One hundred years after the end of the First World War. That war wiped out a generation of men and women. I am here because although my grandfather was placed in the 'dying tent' following his illness during the Gallipoli campaign, a nurse decided he should live and had him transported back to Blighty where he recovered. My mother was born at the end of 1916. Our entire family of aunts, siblings, and numerous cousins (almost 70) exist because of that one nurse, and I thank her.

Pat Kennedy 845397

The Fallen of the First World War from this village of Maiden Bradley were:

Arthur Charles Adlam Percy George Adlam Sidney Aldridge Walter Aldridge John Harwood Barker Charles Clark William Cleal Harold Doman James Ford Arthur Flower Wilfred Greening Francis Howell Frederick Hulance Frederick Newbury Russel Prowse Victor William White

Theirs was the ultimate sacrifice, they gave their lives fighting for their country and they should never be forgotten.

Rev. Carol

The apples are continuing to drop off my tree, I thought that the crop this year would be diminished but not so. The taste of stewed Bramley apple and custard is for me a childhood reminder of autumn. Harvest services have been enjoyed in the church; it was great to welcome Whitesheet's Academy children and their new head Mrs Higgins. The children read very confidently and technology in the form of a data projector and screen arrived in the church in support! Thanks to everyone who generously donated items for the Trussell Trust Foodbank through the church or school.

On the 4th November we will have the Village Hall Sunday Catch-up as usual and then go on to the Church for an 11am All Saints festival service. It's important to celebrate this time of remembering all the saints who helped to build the church and people will come up from West Knoyle and Mere to join in the communion service.

11th November is Remembrance Day and falls on the Sunday, of course this year marks 100 years since the end of World War 1. The service starts at 10.30 am.

Date for your diary: 30th November Maiden Bradley Fair.

Blessings Rev Carol

Welcome Club

Sadly, Chris Short passed away quietly at home shortly after sending me what was to be her last report on the Welcome Club activities. We send our condolences to her family and the many friends who have spent time enjoying all that Chris organised in the Horningsham and Maiden Bradley communities. No doubt we will hear from the Club Committee about arrangements that will have to be confirmed or changed in due course.

Our visit to Sidmouth was every bit as enjoyable as all the previous trip this season – we have been so lucky with the weather – smiley faces again!

We had a slight change for October when we visited Bristol harbour – details next time.

We have all met up with our local Reflexologist, so discover more of our time with Catherine in the December issue of the News. Christmas Lunch on 4th December "Tempus Fugit" names and cash as soon as possible please! Coach trip free as a present from the Club. Times notified ASAP. The lunch will be our final fling for 2018 then back again with a new programme for 2019 on 21st February.

Recently looking through some of my family effects (my maternal grandmother's) I came across a number of books by various 1st World War poets. These books are heavily laced with scraps of newspaper cuttings of the period, mostly poems. As in fact is her Bible.

In one book in particular by Robert W Service (The Canadian Kipling) I found the poem below on a scrap of newspaper so fragile it started to breakup when I tried to move it. There is no sign of the author, that bit is missing. It is trench humour however. Although appropriate for the 100 commemoration of the end of the 1st Word War.

The Bomber.

Old Bill Pike standing on the parapet
Old Bill Pike Mills bomb in his hand
In comes a Whizz Bang
Now he's a bomber in the promised land

The 'whizz bang' was originally attributed to the noise made by shells from German 77mm field guns. In all cases however the name was derived from the fact that shells fired from light or field artillery travelled faster than the speed of sound.

Whizz bangs were much feared as the net result was that infantrymen were given virtually no warning of incoming high-velocity artillery fire.

SOMERSET ARMS

AUTUMN TRACTOR RUN & FREE HOUSE STATUS

On Sunday 30th September Andy and Lynn, our Landlord/Landlady, held their autumn event involving tractors from a variety of eras, apple pressing, live music and an outdoor lamb roast which raised a total of £335 which will be shared between the Wiltshire Air Ambulance and Dorothy House charities. The event was timed to coincide with the end of the Somerset Arms lease with Wadworths brewery and control of the pub being returned to the Duke of Somerset's estate. Plans for structural and cosmetic improvements are still under development with work expected to start in the near future.

Since taking over at the Somerset Arms Andy and Lynn have injected a great deal of time and effort which has paid dividends for locals and visitors alike. You only have to look at recent Trip Advisor feedback to appreciate the impact made by Andy and Lynn and the good news is that they will be staying on to ensure a successful future for our pub.

Having Free House Status removes the contractual links with Wadworths, giving Andy and Lynn the freedom to choose their suppliers and the products they can sell. The benefit to customers is that they can expect a greater choice of beers, wines and spirits and hopefully a stabilisation of prices.

Regular visitors to the pub will be aware that Andy and Lynn support our local Air Ambulance charity and are also involved with a number of military charities. This year they will be providing a Remembrance Day curry for the benefit of those that attend the service at the parish church

Camino take two

There was a certain amount of trepidation on my part when leaving for my second holiday walking the Pilgrim's way in Spain because this time I was going alone with only my travel and the first and last hostels booked. I needn't have worried about not being able to talk to a companion because even before I boarded the flight out of Gatwick, I fell into conversation with other Pilgrims who were walking the Coastal Route from Biarritz to Santiago de Compostela (The Way of Saint James) and like me, tackling the long route in manageable sections.

So I have been asked several times about the reason why anyone would want to take on an 800k walk. This takes me back to my school days reading Chaucer's Canterbury Tales and being fascinated by the portrayal of the different characters from such a period in history. The Pilgrim's stories were written in Middle English between 1387 and 1400 and those Pilgrims were supposedly on a religious journey from London to the shrine of Saint Thomas a Becket, the Archbishop of Canterbury, who was murdered (then later buried) in the Cathedral by followers of King Henry II following disputes over the rights and privileges of the Church. Each Pilgrim had a tale to tell and in essence they were more worldly than religious.

Regarding the variety of Pilgrims I met this time in Spain the motivations for the walk ranged from religious to spiritual and fitness challenge and leisure walking. Whatever the reason, the Camino Pilgrimage captivated their imagination and all had their different story to tell and for me, this is what makes the walk so interesting in such a landscape.

Returning to Puente La Reina on the first day, I arrived at my hostel at 22.30 and it was still very hot but very welcoming. Setting off that first morning from familiar surroundings I made good time along the natural tracks arriving 18k later at Villatuerta and the delightful hostel of Simone and Miguel with its cool plunge pool, hammocks, dinner, Rioja wine, clean facilities and excellent company from pilgrims from Italy, Lithuania, Germany, Holland, Ireland and Australia. I should add that this particular hostel was exceptional and not yet to be repeated.

The following few days I was accompanied by different people from that second hostel. My friend from Ireland was a Mediator, listening to the conflict within individuals who had suffered and were still suffering from the historical conflicts in that country, and she spent her time trying to help them understand and accept their situation. Alexandra from Holland taught English from her countryside home and the 'boys' Gary and Adam from Australia (both grandfathers) were pounding the kilometres at a pace I could only keep up with for a few yards, had walked many routes of the Camino through Spain, though this time they left their wives behind.

Feet and Heat. It was tough going, and not until I met a hostel manager, Raphael, did my feet improve as Raphael was trained by the military on the management of exactly how to care for the feet on these long distance walks. He also explained that unless I continued the walk in one go, I would always have bruised toes and blisters. "The Camino has three distinct stages" he explained, "The first is the pain, getting used to walking and carrying a backpack. The second stage is introspective – why am I doing this! And the third is the spiritual and being at one with the mind, body and place." Something to think about on my next visit.

The majority of people I met were from the USA and I couldn't fail to ask how they felt about their president. Mostly, they were embarrassed and had not voted his way but neither did they support the opposition and so were unrepresented. It is interesting that only 15% of Americans have passports at present though is due to change in due course when everyone will be obliged to have one.

During the last three days of my walk I woke about 5am and started out an hour later with torches and others in order to make the most of the coolest part of the day. Much of the walking was along long stretches of straight track alongside vineyards of the Rioja region then alongside fields of sunflowers. Temperatures reached 30C and beyond on most days and in order to reach the next hostel and book a bed, the early start was essential. Watching the sunrise, listening to the cocks crowing and looking forward to finding the first café for breakfast (coffee, freshly squeezed orange juice and a pastry) was different each day and difficult to catch on camera.

One particular morning when I was alone and looking forward to breakfast, in the distance I saw a stall which I thought might sell food but on arrival and to my disappointment, I saw it only sold Camino trinkets. I signalled to the elderly lady behind her stall that I needed food (Makaton style sign language) she went inside her house (the first I had seen for miles) and brought out two pears for which she wouldn't accept payment and equally signalled that she had no more for the pilgrims who were following. I packed them away quickly, thanked her profusely and at the earliest opportunity ate them with relish.

Food stalls could be found in the most isolated places and usually a donation and not a fixed price was expected. Quite early on during my walk, I found one of these stalls in an olive grove where fruit, snacks and seats had been arranged. There was a bookcase with books of various languages and I decided it was time to lighten my load and so I shed the two very heavy books I had brought as evening reading entertainment and progressed on my journey.

At Granon I stayed in a basic hostel where mattresses were placed on the floor and everyone had to partake in the preparation of the feeding process and yes, again I managed to end up cooking the food for the hostel, approximately 45 people. The accommodation was cleverly attached to the local enormous church with its gold leaf altar-back that stretched from ground floor to the apex of the roof. We stayed in the church for a service with a very long sermon spoken, of course, in Spanish. Now if the service had been conducted in Latin, as in days of yore, I would have understood!

Eventually I arrived at my last hostel at Atapuerca a small village with a couple of hostels and an excellent pilgrim menu with a starter of lobster bisque any restaurant in London would be proud of. Atapuerca is famous for the discovery of the oldest remains ever found of the human species dating from between 1.2 million years ago and 630,000 years ago. The on-going archaeological dig has been designated as a UNESCO World Heritage Site.

The next morning a taxi arrived at 7am and took me to Burgos railway station where I took the train to San Sebastian (three hours long), caught the bus to Biarritz (one hour) and found my hotel for the night before my flight the next morning back to Gatwick. Three days travelling in total and eight days walking, subtracting another 180K from the 800k personal journey. Only 520K left for next year when the long stretches of straight Roman roads along flat reaches of the Meseta plain will be walked.
